True, meaningful research is a dream for any institution like Punjab Medical College Faisalabad. Its importance for the developing Nations is even more to save the society from exploitations. As a member in the Institutional Research Committee of Punjab Medical College, I have moments of joy to contribute and at the same time uneasy thoughts of moving at a slow pace.

Research grants with the help of Punjab Government are available to the Institutional Researchers easily, provided the projects are valuable to the community at large and particularly for the institution. Our Principal and other members of the team have put their best efforts to approve the projects and grants without delay. However pace of work to complete the projects is slow. How to break this inertia is our concern. I would like to invite suggestions in this regard.

We have another concern to provide proper, sustainable animal Lab where modern facilities of research are available and animals are kept keeping all ethical issues in mind. Prof. Dr. Riaz Hussain and myself are of the opinion to sign a memorandum of understanding with Agriculture University who have technical knowhow instated of creating a new one at Punjab Medical College. We may run combined projects with them or carryout our research independently. However we should purchase special surgical instruments for Endoscopy, Laparoscopy and vascular surgery and other to train our young surgeons in such Labs apart from projects of basic research.
